☐ Help me with my personalized plate Gookfoot !!sCNHd7RvrZ6 10/11/24(Fri)12:25:37 No.28035476

Alright /o/, almost 10 years ago you faggots helped me pick my personalized plate for my Miata (winner picked CHECKEM, which I just retired only a few months ago). Now I just won pic related Chevrolet Caprice PPV with 38k miles from an auction. Waiting to pick it up now. AZ plates allow 7 characters. First to get trips wins, and I will post confirmation in a few days after I register the thing after I get the title. Let's go boys.

Car is 6.0 L77 powered and has the police drunk seats and rear door panels which I'll have to get swapped for civilian ones, aside from that the body is pretty clean overall, but needs a solid cleaning all around.

I plan on trying to source a proper center console from a later Chevrolet SS after I clean it all up and make sure car is mechanically sound. Maybe next year if it proves reliable enough I'll do some mods to it like long tubes, cam, DOD delete and minor stuff like that.

Thanks, senpai. I always loved these but never thought I'd get one because the only ones I've seen on the market already have been modded and beat to hell by whoever's owned it since retired, and a lot of them have tons of miles. I found this basically by accident on a local city government auction. There was two hours left till the end of the auction, and me and two other dudes were in a small bidding war over it, but I stuck it out and ended up getting it for 12.5k. I'll be selling of my NA Miata and my 2007 Crown Victoria to fund this, I wanted a more fun family car as I almost never get to drive my Miata anymore (married with 2 kids). But yeah

I'm pretty stoked.

I was trying to come up with some Australian shitposter type idea for the plate but couldn't think of anything (car was built in Australia and is a Holden Statesman). Some of these are good though.

What year is it? 12.k is a little steep for a caprice even with the mileage unless its like a 2016 or 2017. I paid $8500 from mine a few years back, though it was a bone stock 2011. Good luck with the car though. They are a ton of fun and still a better value than a g8 regardless. I'd advise checking out a scrap yard with some and just pick up body panels like the front bumper cover, fenders, etc, just to have around. Otherwise everything is on back order. Also join the newcaprice forum cause its still active and very helpful. Also pull the silver box and send it to white audio and media to get it unlocked for bluetooth/music compatibility. I think after I'm bored of my gto, I'll pick up a nice 2014+ and throw a tap shift box on it or something. My caprice felt a lot more sorted than my gto does

When did you get yours? This one is a 2014. Honestly while bidding I did as much digging on BAT and other place on what they were actually selling for (I can't find a single one ever sold on BAT, Cars and Bids had only 3 sold in their history). It seems the price are all over the fucking place. I see clean ones with mods going for like 12-15k with around 100k on the clock, I see ones that look like they've been through hell selling for 7k, like ones that should be in the junkyard. What I used as personal justification was that it was just decommissioned, so I'm only dealing with one particular shop's potential fuckery with alterations/mods/issues, and not them AND some other jackass that owned the thing for a few years and went even deeper. So far I joined some Zeta FB groups and I can see the community is super helpful, I already have some of those fender vents on the way and I'm sourcing a console and seats as we speak. The audio 100% is getting sent off next week to get reprogrammed, I can't stand listening to radio and I need bluetooth.

I bought mine around 2021. It might just be a result of the car market over time but around then you could get clean ones with sub 100k miles for under $10k. Maybe people are starting to catch on with them, but I remember like 3 of them in new jersey with 95k on them sitting on the market for months at like $9500. There was a 2015 with like 70k miles for 12k at the time but it was in pennsylvania which was like a 6 hour drive so I ended up going with the 2011 which wasn't bad. Its nice that yours has a pretty clean and documented record though. Much better than getting a mystery meat car with the electronics cut out with a sawzall. I'd love to get a maryland state trooper car cause I think the 2 tone looks nice, but all of them seem to be pre 2014 with 190k miles minimum

I think maybe people are catching onto them, as I've been reading on some of the groups that report pricing that backs up exactly what you're saying. I always wanted one since they first got adopted by US PDs. I remember the first time I saw one at a local gas station and the cop was passing me coming out to the car, and I asked him like "Hey how do you like those new cruisers you guys got, they look cool as hell" and he said something like, "I fucking hate it, there's no room inside for our gear, I wish they gave me an Explorer instead". I've seen them here and there in duty use, but it wasn't until the last few years I've seen any decommissioned ones driving around. There was one in front of me at a drivethru about 8 months ago that had some gnarly cam and exhaust and sounded nasty af and I was like "man I'd like one of those". I think eventually like everything else they'll go up in price and you'll still pay 10-14k but they'll just get more and more beat until it makes no sense to buy one at all.

Yeah when I was younger there was one in my town that must've been private owned only maybe a few years after production started. It was around 2014 and it had a normal plate and no gear on it. I saw it every day on the way back from school. It sat next to a g8 and it looked like one but it had a chevy badge. I'd heard of a

"chevy police car" but I rarely saw them around. By the time I had a car and was looking for a project, I had heavily considered a marauder since there were 2 or 3 near where I lived, but I ended up doing research while going down the panther platform pipeline, and gave the chevy a second thought, since I figured 300 crank hp in a 4400lb solid axle car sounds slow and a caprice was newer anyway. After finding they made 350hp and almost 400tq and looked sick as hell, I had to get one. I'm praying they never get to the prices g8's are at since at the end of the day they're just a bare bones chevy charger, but at least I know my gto will go up in price as well alongside it. The great part is the one you have uses chevy ss stuff, so its got even better suspension and one of the coolest looking dashes. They're the best daily driver sleepers you can really get if you're willing to do your research
