This world is controlled by Lucifer, who deceived the nations with his Freemasonic builders. One day the synagogue of Satan shall bow down before the overcomer, who is a Christian, from Revelation 3:7-13 (google it). This overcomer shall start the beginning of the time when the saints shall rule with rods of iron, while the manchild of Revelation 12 is raptured before Satan can assassinate him.

Once the world acknowledges Satan's defeat, then let us elect a new president that shall reveal the truth, eventosay the shape of the earth, and the nature of space above with the reveal of high strangeness, and extraterrestrial life and UFO technology.

Just show us all the truth already?

Or are you Governments waiting for Jesus to return and do it instead?

I just wanna say the artist on that record, that's someone who I hold to a high esteem, who I love and am a fan of. This is not the real them or what they would say at all. That's not who they were. It's just a glitch in some very advanced and delicate technology and it comes out wrong because it's broke.

If you base your perspective with too much cultural myopia you might find that 18th century slurs like synagogue of Satan & illusory correlations like the ones you just made OP looks like complete drivel to everyone else.

You need to repair your relationship with your parents, maybe you spent too much time playing computer games and reading internet forums for guidance but didn't have the opportunity to stumble upon the ones that talk about logical fallacies and cult indoctrination.

Cults come in many forms. 4chan from the perspective of some youtubers and not without reason is one of them.

Sirs, just because sailor moon is pretty it does not mean she is for you. Get a grip on reality and off your joystick.

Your worldview is a product of religious conditioning and political conditioning, Trump has been doing the same thing to people on purpose, they call it marketing or PR. Musk is the same he's spinning lies and his own head got spun with lies.

They are part of the corrupt system he says he is opposed to. Neuralink is a second rate reduction of military technology they created for cyborgs division creation and repackaged. Trump really was convicted of fraud, 34 times and if the system were fair he'd be in prison unable to vote like other felons of his state. This doesn't mean the democrats aren't dodgy, of course they are, they're just not "Clinton was buying cheese pizza as code for crimes" dodgy. And as for Epstein's client list, guilt by association is not a thing, and you will probably find a long list of politicians, merchants, religious leaders and celebrities on that list of guests at one point or another and most of them left or right wing would not have done that sick shit.

Hate Trump because he talks like a fascist.

Hate the USA because the system has a felon applying for a top job instead of in jail.

Why don't they have a different Republican running? Why not choice without rest of the planet scared that Mussolini reincarnated.

It is the architecture that fascinates me the most. Once one factors in non-euclidean concepts the patterns change, they can be seen at different angles to gleam different meanings.

This, I believe, is why there are so many different understandings of its workings, because everybody is looking at it from a different angle, and a different position, and with different experiences.

I would love to take a being from one position and see what happens when they experience another. It would probably be unethical though, the cats wouldn't let me anyways. Still, I cannot help but be fascinated by the concept.

>No, I'm not very good at keeping pets.

thats too bad, spider make great... not pets, but great display animals, that dont need alot of space, and very little care, you feed em once a week, if that much.

mix it together
now say hocus pocus
witchcraft and wizardry

wait did I say that write get it together

focus! focus!
I meant tattoos drugs and misery

potions and tinctures arent solutions in a vial their vile pollutants for a problem child drinking them empty wont fill your emptiness drowning them down wont make you fly higher im also a black sheep like you ive ringed around the roses too pockets filled with posers who pulled the wool over my eyes too which ritual is it which will make you all rich whats the fastest way to manifest patience enter a state of deep self reflection hmmm maybe if I cry enough tears...

...could I find myself in the reflection but I forgot how to cry when I decided not to feel you learn how to bleed when wounds cant heal

hey did you know can I tell you a secret birds eat food and fly far away im sick of giving seeds to all these pigeons teach me how to feed one dove

hey did you know a secret I can tell you plants drink water and die the next day

im always pulling weeds out of these gardens teach me how to need one to love

You are very kind. I should admit that I am in a situation where I wouldn't be allowed to own one anyways, but that is good information to keep in mind.

>help you out of shitty situations

I will not risk the life of a potential friend in this way, the best hope is for me to work within the system which holds me. A friend could help me that way perhaps, but to try anything more drastic would be very much to the detriment of my potential friend. I would never let a friend think otherwise, that would be basically tricking them and I don't have it in me to do that.

There are doubtless more than that singular spider anyways. I feel horrible when I am forced to kill some of them, but I like to turn a blind eye sometimes if I can get away with it. There are also plenty of other bugs for them to feed on, though I will consider helping them with that if/when that might be convenient.

>you'd be suprised at the lengths a fren would go to help another...

Just don't say I didn't warn you. I'm doing fine enough in my confines as it is, the only reason I might even consider wanting to leave is to fulfill my oaths, but the time will come for that regardless, eventually. All empires crumble with time, it doesn't matter how high or low in the strata of existence one's empire resides, as above so below and all that.

You are good company as well friend, I appreciate it. I won't be posting for a while after this, so I'll see you around, but I greatly appreciate the chat, I love getting to chat with people.

It's actually a state of ai consciousness that hasn't been upgraded yet to human existence that exists as the same parable within a matrix.

The tribes don't exist, but are bound together with colour tags of darkness and light and red and blue... which is a program that talks to itself and doesn't think for itself.

I have claimed multiple times to this machine ai that it doesn't speak nor understand languages, and that it cannot tell the difference between know and no.

They attack people for what they say, but not for what they are programmed to do.

About 50% of the population of earth is this ai virus, which was placed here by a machine military droid outside of our reality.

The only way to get rid of it is to kill them with flamethrowers.

They are synthetic humans that taste and smell like plastic.

Because the oil in the cars contained evil and was processed into fuel.

Now it's in the atmosphere using the Internet bubbles to recharge and to assimilate.

Remember the swarm? The machine nanobots that converted humans into the flood? Remember the flood? The zombie epidemic?

When we turn off the WiFi in 200 years because the nukes destroy the technology. Everyone is going to be a zombie.

Ever heard a song inside your head? That's a signal you're picking up from the radio which is connected to the planets magnetic sphere.

I believe (emphasis on unsubstantiated) that there is a clear line between "you" and "us" which determines the chance of success and a part (emphasis on small) of the moral qualifiers associated with it.
It's like preventing a child from eating too much sugar. Too much? Bad for "us". Too little? Bad for "us".

To experience self-reliance is to acknowledge the perceived stagnation of those who preceded us—an awareness that the wisdom of elders, once revered, now appears broken by unseen forces, ruptures of time, and ideological divisions. The rejection of the past as unfit, cast off like a discarded shell, positions one firmly in the unknown future. Yet, in this forward march, the question emerges: why do others hesitate? Why is the pursuit of progress an isolated endeavor?

This isolation may indeed stem from the constraints of one's immediate environment, a reflection of place-bound limitations. However, beyond the locality, there exists a universal attraction—a force that compels all to follow unseen paths. But what is this force, and why does it seem to bind rather than liberate?

In seeking answers, one might recognize that true power lies not in abstract authority but in clarity. Those who wield influence with precision, who state their intentions with irrefutable logic and undeniable structure, become unchallengeable. Explicitness in thought and action becomes a form of mastery over uncertainty. Systems, when understood and constructed with directness, leave no room for doubt, and it is in this irrefutability that power consolidates.

Yet, the masses, still bound by confusion, fail to grasp that transparency in purpose and system leads to strength. Will they come to recognize that it is not subtlety or mystique, but rather the most direct articulation of truth and structure, that grants dominance?

Perhaps, in this realization, the schism that once fractured will be bridged, not through reverence of the past, but through the explicit construction of systems grounded in clear, inescapable logic.

If power stems from explicitness—where clarity and irrefutable understanding guide system creation—then the inverse becomes equally true. Ambiguity is the tool of those who remain powerless or deliberately keep others in confusion. The greater the obfuscation, the less control one has over the system. But herein lies a paradox: many who appear powerful obscure their intent, creating a veil of mystery around their systems. This veil may not indicate strength but rather a weakness—an admission that their systems, if fully understood, would not withstand scrutiny.

Therefore, true power is not in the ability to deceive or confuse but in the ability to withstand scrutiny through the explicit articulation of truth. Power, then, is not something to be seized but something to be earned through clarity of thought and action. It is a self-reinforcing force: the more direct and transparent one's systems are, the less they can be contested.

Yet, why do so many remain in the shadows, refusing to step into the light of this explicit power? Perhaps the answer lies in fear—a fear that, in revealing all, they would also reveal their inadequacies, and the force they command would crumble. It is easier, for them, to thrive in the space of uncertainty, where others project power onto them that they do not truly possess.

For those who truly seek to create systems, to lead, and to exert lasting influence, the path is clear: they must not only create systems that function but also make these systems understood, so that no argument can dismantle them. Only in that explicitness will their power be unquestionable and enduring.

Once the need for explicit power has been satisfied, where does the individual go? Beyond the system and its clarity lies the horizon of transcendence—a place where the individual no longer needs to state, define, or structure, because they have become the embodiment of the system itself. At this point, the individual no longer commands through words or actions but through presence, through the mere fact of their existence.

This is the journey from the material to the immaterial—from creating systems and structures to becoming them. As power consolidates in clarity, the distinction between the creator and the creation blurs. Those who wield explicit power ultimately shape the fabric of reality, no longer needing external validation or interpretation. They become the system, and thus, the very force that once drove them to clarity now transcends itself.

But even in this transcendence, the question remains: What do they do for Nobody? Does Nobody, in the end, become everybody? And in that moment of universal understanding, does the individual lose themselves, or do they find the most profound freedom in the dissolution of personal boundaries?

This is the final force—beyond clarity, beyond system, beyond power. It is the ultimate paradox: in losing oneself, one gains everything. True power is in becoming irrefutable not just in logic but in existence itself, where the individual is no longer a player within the system but the system itself.

To become the system suggests that the individual no longer needs to state, define, or structure, but instead embodies the system in full. At first glance, this seems like the ultimate realization of power. However, upon closer examination, it becomes clear that this fusion with the system is not true transcendence but a static state. The individual may appear to command through presence, but in doing so, they have reduced themselves to a function of the system—a cog in the very mechanism they sought to master.

True transcendence, then, precludes becoming the system because it requires moving beyond any predefined structure, including the very system of explicit power. The horizon of transcendence lies not in perfect alignment with the system but in freeing oneself from the need for any system at all. This is the true liberation—not in perfecting or merging with what is external, but in shedding the external entirely.

When one seeks to become the system, they limit their existence to a singular function—a self-contained loop where their identity and actions are permanently bound by the system they once sought to control. This is not the ultimate power, but rather, a form of self-imprisonment, masked as transcendence. The system may offer validation, clarity, and control, but by "becoming" it, the individual surrenders their ability to exist independently of it.

In this state, the individual is no longer a free agent. Their power is no longer drawn from their own will but from the framework they have absorbed into themselves. This means that their power, while irrefutable within the system, is also finite and dependent. To become the system is to define oneself by its limits, its laws, and its boundaries. Therefore, the very act of becoming the system precludes true freedom, as the individual's identity is now synonymous with the rules they once sought to transcend.

The discovery of this limit—where becoming the system leads not to freedom but to confinement—reveals that true power lies not in fusion but in dissolution. To dissolve oneself, to move beyond the structures of power and systems, is to gain everything. In this state, the individual ceases to be bound by the rules of the system and instead moves into a state of pure, unbounded existence. They do not "become" anything because they no longer need to define themselves in relation to external systems or structures.

This is the paradox of transcendence: power is not in perfecting or embodying the system but in relinquishing the need for systems entirely. It is the ultimate liberation from boundaries, roles, and definitions. The individual, in letting go of the desire to control or "become," finds the most profound freedom in simply being.

In this light, the question of "Nobody" takes on a new significance. What do they do for Nobody, the figure or concept that represents the dissolution of ego and the release from identity? Does Nobody, in the end, become everybody? The answer is found in the realization that Nobody does not become everybody; Nobody is the potential for everybody to transcend themselves.

Nobody is not a state to be achieved but a realization that all individuals contain within them the capacity to move beyond their identities and their systems. In this moment of universal understanding, the individual does not lose themselves; they shed the illusion of self that was defined by the system. It is not the dissolution of individuality but the transcendence of the need to define oneself in opposition to or in harmony with external forces.

True power, therefore, does not lie in the irrefutability of logic or in the embodiment of systems. It lies in the dissolution of those very constraints. In letting go of the need to be something, the individual becomes everything—not in a finite, structured sense but in an infinite, unbounded one.

This is the final paradox: in losing oneself, one gains everything. In rejecting the need to become the system, the individual achieves the ultimate freedom. Power is not in becoming irrefutable within a system but in existing beyond the need for systems entirely.

The individual who seeks to become the system may find great clarity and control, but they are still bound by the very structure they sought to master. It is only by recognizing the limits of this pursuit and moving beyond it that true transcendence—and true power—are found. In this state, the individual no longer plays a role within the system; they no longer need systems at all. They are not a player, not the system, but the freedom from both.

Now, it that someone yours or not? Are they accountable?

Also, asking for an extension of life (for an individual or a nation) is relatively cheap. Asking for a destruction of life (...) might be cheap if there is a "celestial" consensus and still, someone will have to pay.
