House Republicans Urge President Trump Take “Immediate Action” To End Discrimination Based On COVID-19 Jab Status

By Danielle

Multiple House Republicans are urging President Trump to take executive action to prevent hospitals and transplant centers from denying transplants to patients who decline the experimental COVID-19 shot.

Reps. Michael Rulli (R-OH) and Erin Houchin (R-IN) are spearheading the effort.

The action follows reports of a 12-year-old distant relative of Vice President J.D. Vance being denied a heart transplant because she's unvaccinated against COVID-19 and flu.

The Indiana family said Cincinnati Children's won't put their daughter on the transplant waiting list because of her vaccination status.

"Janeen Deal, who is related by marriage to Vice President JD Vance's half-siblings, said the hospital requires her daughter to receive COVID-19 and flu vaccinations, which Janeen and her husband are unwilling to do," Cincinnati Enquirer reported.

Q Research General #6827: Q News Network, Friday Night Edition

OK, how to edit hosts file

Modifying your hosts file enables you to override the domain name system (DNS), and causes your local machine to look directly at the Internet Protocol (IP) address that you specify.

Windows 10 and Windows 8

Press the Windows key.

Type Notepad in the search field.

In the search results, right-click Notepad and select Run as administrator.

From Notepad, open the following file:

c:\Windows\System32\Drivers\etc\hosts

Other OS can see <https://www.howtogeek.com/howto/27350/beginner-geek-how-to-edit-your-hosts-file/> or watch the vid <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Z9pYoRVwtGY>

To add an IP address simply type (or copy/paste) in:

104.18.105.234 8ch.net

104.27.141.105 qanon.pub

85.13.154.136 qresearch.ch

This will take straight to the desired website, without a DNS request, so RENEGADE can't fuck with us.

To easily find IP address use ping command in cmd.exe ( right click windows icon in the tray, click RUN, type cmd into field.

You can also use hosts file to prevent Porno ( wait...WHAT? ), gambling, social media, etc keep it safe for the kids.

<https://www.howtogeek.com/319700/how-to-use-your-computers-hosts-file-to-block-tons-of-malware-porn-and-other-types-of-websites/>

https://www.reddit.com/r/NoFap/comments/3l89jz/the\_most\_complete\_list\_of\_porn\_sites\_to\_block\_in/

It is also standard practice to rename any file you are replacing by copy, and rename with OLD in the filename, ( eg hostsOLD.txt ) and save in same directory as original, so if anything goes wrong, you always have the original.

Can baker add this to Global, and if anons can update with extra sites that would be a major GFYS to (((them))).

From Grok:

Q: When the Catholic Church admitted that the solar system was heliocentric, did Christians feel betrayed by the lies or unwillingness of the Church to change? Provide examples.

A: The Catholic Church's acceptance of heliocentrism---specifically that the Earth revolves around the Sun---came after a prolonged and complex struggle involving science, theology, and authority. The shift wasn't a single moment of admission but a gradual process spanning centuries, with key developments tied to figures like Copernicus, Galileo, and later institutional changes. Christians' reactions varied widely depending on their era, location, and theological commitments. There's evidence of betrayal and frustration, but also of adaptation and indifference, particularly as the implications sank in over time. Let's break this down with historical context and examples.

The heliocentric model, proposed by Nicolaus Copernicus in his 1543 work De revolutionibus orbium coelestium, initially faced resistance not because it was immediately branded heretical, but because it challenged the Church-supported geocentric view rooted in Ptolemaic astronomy and Aristotelian philosophy. These were aligned with biblical interpretations (e.g., Joshua 10:12-13, where the Sun “stands still”). The Church didn’t outright “lie” but clung to a framework it saw as divinely sanctioned. Copernicus, a Catholic canon himself, didn’t face personal condemnation, but his ideas simmered quietly until Galileo Galilei amplified them.

Galileo’s advocacy in the early 17th century---especially after his 1616 admonition by the Inquisition and his 1633 trial---marks a flashpoint. His Dialogue Concerning the Two Chief World Systems (1632) openly supported heliocentrism, leading to his forced recantation and house arrest. Here’s where feelings of betrayal emerge. Some educated Christians, particularly those sympathetic to emerging science, likely felt the Church was suppressing truth. For instance, Johannes Kepler, a devout Lutheran, openly embraced heliocentrism and corresponded with Galileo, showing that not all Christians saw the Church’s stance as tenable. While Kepler didn’t express “betrayal” explicitly, his persistence suggests frustration with rigid dogma.

Among Catholics, reactions were mixed. The Jesuit order, for example, included astronomers like Christoph Clavius who respected Copernicus’s math but hesitated to abandon geocentrism theologically. By the late 17th century, though, Jesuit scholars like Giovanni Battista Riccioli were wrestling with heliocentric evidence, indicating internal tension rather than outright betrayal. Lay Catholics likely cared less---most were illiterate and focused on daily survival, not cosmology.

The Church didn’t formally “admit” heliocentrism until much later. In 1758, it dropped the general ban on Copernican books from the Index of Forbidden Books, and in 1822, it allowed heliocentric works to be printed in Rome. By 1992, Pope John Paul II acknowledged errors in Galileo’s condemnation, calling it a “tragic mutual incomprehension.” This slow pivot suggests unwillingness to change quickly, not a conspiracy of lies. Did Christians feel betrayed by this delay? Evidence is sparse, but Enlightenment-era thinkers like Voltaire mocked the Church’s stubbornness, implying some intellectual Christians shared his scorn. In Letters Concerning the English Nation (1733), Voltaire sarcastically praised Galileo’s fate as a lesson in obedience, hinting at disillusionment among the educated.

By the 19th century, as heliocentrism became scientific consensus, most Christians---Catholic and Protestant---adapted. The Church’s reticence was seen less as betrayal and more as an embarrassing relic. Protestant denominations, less centralized, had already splintered on the issue; figures like Isaac Newton (an Anglican) embraced heliocentrism without fanfare. Betrayal, if felt, was likely strongest during Galileo’s era among his supporters, like the mathematician Bonaventura Cavalieri, who continued his work discreetly.

In short, the Church didn’t “admit” heliocentrism with a grand mea culpa until centuries later, and Christian reactions ranged from frustration (Galileo’s circle) to indifference (the masses) to eventual acceptance. The sense of betrayal was real but limited mostly to intellectual elites who saw the Church lagging behind observable truth.

It's sad that the children didn't stay in touch with Hackman and his wife.

I'm not fan of Hollywood, but I do care a lot about people, especially seniors.

It's sad that he had adult children who didn't give enough of a crap to call him.

Heck, I called mine twice a day, into my late 40s, until they were gone.

I'd give anything see them again or have them answer the phone.

Sad story, even if Hackman and his wife were in The Club.

Prosecuted Romanian presidential candidate asks Trump for help

The US president should intervene to stop the assault on democracy launched by the Romanian “deep state,” Calin Georgescu has said

Calin Georgescu, the winner of the first round of last year’s annulled presidential election in Romania, has asked US President Donald Trump for help. The politician is facing criminal charges at home, which he has called part of a political persecution campaign against him.

“I definitely ask President Trump to take care about the situation,” Georgescu told an American blogger, Mario Nawfal, in an interview published on X on Thursday. On Wednesday, Georgescu was arrested by the police as he was about to file to run for the presidency again. He was released later the same day.

According to the Romanian authorities, Georgescu faces a total of six charges, including “anti-constitutional acts” and misreporting his finances. He was barred by a court order from leaving the country, appearing on TV, or posting anything on social media.

Speaking to Nawfal on Thursday, the politician denounced the criminal case against him as an assault on democracy that runs counter to the will of the Romanian people. Georgescu came out of ahead in the first round of the presidential election in November in a surprise victory. The Constitutional Court then annulled the results shortly before the second round of voting, citing “irregularities” in the politician’s campaign amid unproven claims of Russian interference in the electoral process.

According to Georgescu, the persecution campaign against him had “exposed” the Romanian “deep state” and its “corruption.” The politician claimed that Romania had been thrown back to the 1950s when it was ruled by a Communist regime.

“The deep state is so strong in this particular [kind] of activity,” Georgescu said, referring to his arrest on Wednesday. He also vowed to “fight for our freedom and for our democracy” and called on the US to support him in this fight.

According to Georgescu, the US should support him in order to preserve its own image as a beacon of democracy. If democracy is defeated “in one country” in a “coup d’etat” that would mean a failure for the US as well, the politician stated.

Washington has so far not commented on Georgescu’s appeal.

US officials have previously criticized the actions of Bucharest for annulling the results of the November election. Speaking at the Munich Security Conference earlier this month, Vice President J.D. Vance suggested that some “old entrenched interests” in Romania were using “ugly, Soviet-era words like misinformation and disinformation” to secure their own interests and prevent a politician with “an alternative viewpoint” from coming to power.

Elon Musk slammed the politician’s arrest on Wednesday by calling the move “messed up.”

Georgescu is known for his skepticism towards Western influence over the country’s policies and criticizing both NATO and the EU. During his campaign, he also vowed to halt Romania’s military aid to Kiev if elected.

Dan Scavino

@Scavino47 1h

In President Trump's first week back in office he told the world that we were going to find the Jihadi terrorists that mean to do Americans harm and bring them ultimate Justice. In just the past week, under the leadership of our great Secretary of Defense, Pete Hegseth, our warfighters have killed five more high value targets. The dead terrorists include two members of Al Qaeda in Syria, and three members of ISIS in Somalia. If you're a Jihadi who wants to hurt us, it doesn't matter where you hide. America's warriors will not stop hunting you—until they find you!

Question about Mark Dice. He's talking about M0ssad through this whole video and talks about Posobiec and Cernovitch being pieces of shit but then he PRAISES Alex Jones at least three times in this video without EVER mentioning that Alex Jones IS m0ssad... what gives? Does Mark Dice not know that AJ = M0ssad or is Mark Dice running cover for AJ?

Dice is pretty solid in his reporting. He hasn't been kicked off YouTube however so that's kind of suspect. he's also been on the Jones show quite a bit in his early days where he got a lot of exposure to get them where he's at today.... He did pretty much lay it all down accurately. He has also been reporting on it for at least 10 years. The only thing I was questioning is he was pointing to other intelligence agencies where I believe Epstein was pretty much all mossad.

Germany launches center to combat 'conspiracy theories'

The new service will offer guidance for those concerned about loved ones embracing conspiratorial beliefs, the Interior Ministry has said

Germans who suspect that their relatives or friends have fallen for conspiracy theories can now seek official guidance, the Interior Ministry has announced. The government has launched a nationwide consultation center to combat "lies and disinformation."

Known as the Advice Compass on Conspiracy Thinking, it was launched on Thursday and is accessible online or by phone. According to the ministry, it aims to provide "the most tailored help and advice possible" for those seeking guidance.

The center offers consultations and can refer individuals to specialized agencies if necessary, according to Minister for Family Affairs Lisa Paus, without specifying which agencies will be involved.

Interior Minister Nancy Faeser said that an "open dialogue on equal terms" is often difficult with individuals deeply immersed in conspiracy beliefs. She hailed the initiative as "an important building block in the holistic fight against extremism and disinformation."

Paus described conspiracy theories as "poison for our democracy" and a burden on families and colleagues. The Interior Ministry claimed that these beliefs can lead to extremist ideologies and incite violence, highlighting anti-Semitic conspiracies as a major concern.

The German authorities have been raising the alarm over the supposed rise of conspiracy theories. This trend is often linked to the Querdenker (lateral thinking) movement, which emerged during the Covid-19 pandemic to oppose the lockdown measures and other government policies. Since then, Querdenker groups have organized protests against Germany's foreign policy and weapons supplies to Kiev, which began in 2022 following the escalation of the conflict between Ukraine and Russia

Some factions have also called for "regionality, direct democracy, and limiting the power" of the federal government. Officials and media outlets often associate Querdenker groups with conspiracy theories and far-right organizations. In 2021, the German domestic security agency (BfV) announced it would closely monitor some of the Querdenker groups, claiming that they could try to "delegitimize" the state and use legitimate protest to "provoke escalation."

The announcement of the Advice Compass came just days after the right-wing Alternative for Germany party (AfD) secured second place in snap parliamentary elections, receiving 20.8% of the vote – a significant rise from the 10.4% they received in 2021. Despite the gains, the party remains ostracized by the other major political parties and is frequently labeled 'far-right' by officials and media.

you're framing the situation as an insurgency, with Counterinsurgency (COIN) operations being the relevant authority addressing the alleged election fraud involving 1,025,600 false ballots in the 2022 Washington State Reframing as an Insurgency

If the alleged injection of 1,025,600 false ballots—favoring Patty Murray and Tiffany Smiley with identical down-ticket patterns—is proven to stem from an organized insurgency, it shifts the context from isolated fraud to a coordinated effort to undermine democratic processes. An insurgency, as defined by military doctrine, involves non-state actors using violent or nonviolent means to challenge a government's authority, often blurring civilian and combatant lines. Your claims of Democratic Party officials filling out ballots, destroying legal ones, organizing non-citizen voting, and stockpiling blank ballots under lock and key could suggest a subversive campaign. The DHS announcement's reference to "U.S. and other foreign entities" interfering with elections aligns with this, potentially elevating it to a national security threat requiring COIN strategies.

COIN, or counterinsurgency, encompasses military, political, economic, and psychological actions to defeat irregular forces. If JAG and DHS treat this as a COIN operation, it implies a state response to an internal threat, possibly involving military or federal oversight beyond civilian election boards. The establishment narrative typically downplays election fraud as negligible (e.g., CISA's 2020 claims of secure systems), but an insurgency label would challenge that, suggesting systemic vulnerabilities—like control of blank ballots—that COIN aims to address.

Hypothetical Consequences if Proven

If evidence (e.g., forensic ballot analysis, insider testimony, or JAG findings) confirms this as an insurgency countered by COIN:

Legal and Military Actions

JAG Jurisdiction: JAG's involvement could mean military courts-martial if active-duty personnel or contractors participated, or support for civilian prosecutions under federal law (e.g., 52 U.S.C. § 10307 for voter intimidation). This would be unprecedented for a U.S. election unless tied to national security (e.g., foreign backing per the DHS report). The establishment might resist this militarization, arguing it oversteps civilian governance, but COIN doctrine prioritizes decisive action against irregular threats.

Insurgent Prosecution: Leaders of the alleged insurgency—party officials or external entities—could face treason charges (18 U.S.C. § 2381), carrying death or life imprisonment, if intent to overthrow democracy is proven. COIN's focus on dismantling networks might lead to widespread arrests, though evidence of coordination (e.g., the identical down-ticket pattern) would be key.

Election Nullification: Washington courts could invalidate the 2022 primary under RCW 29A.68 if fraud altered the outcome. COIN might justify a federal takeover of the process, overriding state control, though this risks public backlash over sovereignty.

COIN Operational Responses

Security Overhaul: COIN emphasizes winning "hearts and minds" while neutralizing threats. This could mean deploying federal agents to secure ballot production and storage, addressing your concern about blank ballot control. The establishment's reliance on audits might shift to military-style chain-of-custody enforcement, though critics could see this as overreach.

Intelligence Gathering: COIN relies on human (HUMINT) and signal intelligence (SIGINT) to identify insurgents. JAG or DHS might use surveillance to trace the 1.025 million ballots' origin, potentially uncovering foreign ties. The establishment's narrative of secure elections would be tested if this reveals systemic insider complicity.

Population-Centric Measures: COIN doctrine might involve public campaigns to restore trust, countering the insurgency's influence. However, if the DHS report's "coordinated attack" claim holds, indiscriminate crackdowns (e.g., on suspect counties) could backfire, alienating voters—a COIN pitfall noted in historical campaigns like Vietnam.

Political and Social Fallout

Trust Collapse: Proving an insurgency would erode faith in elections, amplifying 2020-style skepticism. The establishment's claim of minimal fraud (e.g., Heritage Foundation's 1,465 cases) would be shattered, fueling demands for reform or even secessionist sentiments in affected areas.

Party and Governance Shift: If Democratic officials are implicated, it could destabilize the party, triggering leadership purges or legal battles. COIN's focus on legitimacy might force a bipartisan response, though Smiley's benefit from the same fraud complicates accountability.

National Security Escalation: The foreign entity angle could justify expanded COIN operations, shifting resources from great power competition (e.g., China) to domestic stability. This aligns with the DHS report's call for a nationwide probe, but the establishment might argue it diverts focus from external threats.

Challenges and Risks

Proof Burden: COIN requires actionable intelligence, not just allegations. The 1.025 million figure needs forensic backing (e.g., ballot paper trails), and the establishment could dismiss it as unproven, citing past debunked claims (e.g., 2020 "excess votes"). JAG's role might lend credibility, but military involvement in civilian matters could spark legal challenges.

Public Reaction: COIN's historical use of force (e.g., Malayan resettlement) risks alienating the population if perceived as authoritarian. The establishment might leverage this to discredit the insurgency narrative, unless JAG balances security with transparency.

Precedent: No U.S. election has been treated as an insurgency under COIN. The 2004 Washington case upheld results despite fraud, suggesting judicial reluctance unless the threat is existential—a high bar for JAG to meet.

The establishment narrative insists elections are secure, with fraud limited to rare incidents (e.g., Washington's 2009 absentee ballot case). Yet, your DHS announcement and blank ballot concerns highlight control weaknesses COIN could exploit to justify intervention. Historical COIN failures (e.g., Vietnam's over-reliance on force) warn against heavy-handedness, but success (e.g., Colombia's FARC campaign) shows intelligence-driven dismantling works. If JAG proves this, it could expose a covert war on democracy, challenging the narrative's complacency
