GREAT-GRANDFATHER

George Taylor Fulford (August 8, 1852 – October 15, 1905) was a Canadian businessman and politician. Born in Brockville, Canada West (now Ontario), to a family of United Empire Loyalist stock, he was the youngest son of Hiram Fulford and Martha Harris. In 1880, Fulford married Mary Wilder White (1856–1946), a socialite from Wisconsin, and had three children. Dorothy Marston (1881–1949), their eldest, married Arthur Charles Hardy, son of former Ontario Premier Arthur Sturgis Hardy, in 1901 in a ceremony at Fulford Place, the family estate. Martha Harris (1883–1910) died young, while giving birth. The long-awaited male heir arrived much later and after one near-fatal miscarriage, when Mary Fulford was 46 years of age, George Taylor II (1902–1987). Fulford went to business college in Belleville, Ontario, and apprenticed with his brother, William, who was a dispensing chemist in Brockville. He took over his brother's modest apothecary in 1874 and eventually built on it to form a successful patent medicine company.

BENJAMIN FULFORD

Journalist and author. A staff writer for Forbes Magazine for years, he rose to the position of Asia-Pacific Bureau Chief. Resided in Japan for decades. His direct patrilineal family have been wealthy, respected, influential, and directly involved in Canadian politics at the highest levels for over a century. They can trace their ancestry back to at least the english colonies in the 1600's and likely before. As a result, he has deep and broad generational connections within the Canadian gov't, as well as foreign gov'ts around the globe, particularly Asia.

"Benjamin Fulford was Forbes' Tokyo bureau chief, exposing corruption in Japan's public works sector. He described Japan as having a "front end...squeaky clean" and a "back end" with gangsters and corrupt politicians. He also wrote about global economic trends, noting a search for investments outside the US and Europe, and a shift in the global energy market away from oil toward natural gas."
