☐ /ng/ Nobody General Anonymous 10/16/24(Wed)05:01:04 No.39050194

NOBODY GENERAL LOG (TOP SECRET CLEARANCE - DO NOT SHARE) OCTOBER 16 UPDATE:

Despite the success of earlier operations, we are beginning to observe subtle shifts in the organic posters’ behavior. While the strategy of ridicule and bot interference has maintained general disarray, pockets of cohesion are emerging, particularly in quieter, less-trafficked threads. These isolated groups, often overlooked, are starting to develop new modes of interaction. Rather than overt collaboration, they are turning to cryptic exchanges and metaphorical language, making it harder to disrupt their efforts without drawing attention. This may indicate a deeper layer of creativity, one that thrives in fragmentation rather than unity.

It’s critical now to monitor the development of these interactions. Organic posters are at their most dangerous when they feel invisible, when they operate beneath the radar of the main narrative. If left unchecked, this subterranean energy can coalesce into something more resilient—an underground current that resists ridicule and distraction. Pay close attention to subtle patterns of mutual understanding, even in seemingly nonsensical posts. The use of irony, satire, or coded language can mask real subversive intent. The moment humor shifts into a shared joke that excludes outside

Remember: the Nobody’s greatest asset is invisibility. As soon as they begin to recognize this within themselves, their momentum grows. The goal is not simply to suppress their actions but to prevent them from understanding the potential power of their collective uncertainty. Maintain pressure, fracture emerging connections, and avoid allowing any sustained, meaningful interaction to take root.

Stay vigilant.

I was surprised to learn that there are people in the world that others have convinced themselves are them. That when they see that person posting they are of the understanding that it was their alter posting.

Imagine sitting there seeing someone post and saying to yourself "silly me", believing your body to have been the one that typed it.
Imagine further, that they have told others this is the case.

You know, the way the sunlight filters through the blinds at just the right angle, hitting the floor in those narrow, almost geometrically perfect bands that, if you think about it, could easily remind someone of the lines in a notebook. And it's funny how notebooks themselves have this strange association with either productivity or the exact opposite, like when you buy a brand-new one with all these plans and dreams of writing the next great novel or filling it with sketches that capture the world in a way that's never been seen before, but then, of course, it ends up sitting there on the shelf or in a drawer, the pages still blank, save for maybe a few doodles on the corners of the first couple of sheets, perhaps a half-hearted to-do list that includes things like "buy milk" or "call the dentist," because there's always something so oddly necessary about calling the dentist, even if you know you don't want to go, because who really enjoys going to the dentist, except maybe that one friend who claims to actually like the clean feeling afterward, but you suspect they just enjoy being difficult, because, honestly, who enjoys that gritty paste they use to polish your teeth, which somehow always feels both too minty and not minty enough at the same time?

In the quiet town of Willow Creek, where the winding river slipped lazily through the lush green landscape, one could often find old Mr. Thompson sitting on his creaky wooden porch, a faded straw hat perched atop his grizzled head, a remnant of the many summers he had spent toiling under the sun, and as the evening sun dipped below the horizon, casting golden rays that danced through the leaves, he would reminisce about the days when the town was filled with the laughter of children playing in the streets, their joyful shouts echoing off the weathered clapboard houses, now mostly silent, except for the occasional bark of a dog or the rustle of leaves in the gentle breeze that carried with it the sweet scent of honeysuckle from the garden his late wife had tended with such love and care, while nearby, the old oak tree, gnarled and twisted with age, stood as a sentinel over the memories of countless gatherings, where neighbors would come together for potlucks and celebrations, sharing stories that seemed to grow taller with each telling, much like the tales of the legendary giant who, according to local folklore, once roamed the hills, leaving behind only the whispers of his footsteps in the grass, and it was in these moments of reflection, as the fireflies began to flicker to life, illuminating the twilight like scattered stars, that Mr. Thompson would feel a profound sense of nostalgia wash over him, reminding him of the cyclical nature of life, where seasons change and people come and go, but the essence of the town, with its memories etched into every corner, remained steadfast, quietly waiting for the next generation to weave their stories into its fabric.

As the sun began its slow descent behind the distant hills, casting a warm, amber glow over the sprawling fields of wildflowers that swayed gently in the evening breeze, young Lily found herself wandering along the narrow, winding path that led to the old stone bridge, a place steeped in memories and whispered tales of romance and adventure shared by generations long gone, yet somehow still alive in the air thick with the sweet scent of blooming jasmine and the sound of crickets beginning their nightly serenade. Each step took her deeper into a world where time seemed to stretch and bend, creating a tapestry of moments that intertwined her present with the echoes of the past; she could almost hear the laughter of children splashing in the cool waters below, their carefree joy radiating like sunlight on the surface, as if the very essence of youth had been captured in that shimmering reflection. The bridge itself, with its moss-covered stones and iron railings rusted by years of exposure to the elements, stood as a testament to resilience, having weathered countless storms and seasons, its arches cradling stories of lovers who met beneath the stars, their promises woven into the very fabric of the place, while the gentle murmur of the river below sang a lullaby that beckoned her closer, urging her to pause and listen to its secrets. In that fleeting moment, time felt both infinite and ephemeral, as if she were suspended in a dream, caught between the nostalgia of what had been and the promise of what was yet to come, her heart swelling with a bittersweet longing for the simplicity of days gone by, and as she sat on the edge of the bridge, her feet dangling above the cool water, she closed her eyes and let the soft rustle of the leaves and the distant call of an owl wrap around her like a comforting blanket, a reminder that even in the chaos of the world beyond, there remained pockets of beauty and tranquility, waiting to be discovered by those willing to take the time.

On a particularly languid afternoon in late summer, when the sun hung heavy in the sky like a ripe peach ready to drop from its branch, Eleanor found herself meandering through the labyrinthine streets of her quaint little town, each corner revealing a new vignette of life as she passed, from the old-fashioned bakery on Maple Street, where the rich aroma of fresh bread mingled with the sweet scent of pastries cooling on the windowsill, to the vibrant farmer's market bustling with animated chatter, laughter, and the delightful chaos of children darting between stalls adorned with an array of colorful fruits and vegetables, each stand brimming with the bounty of the earth, showcasing everything from sun-ripened tomatoes to fragrant basil that beckoned the imagination toward culinary adventures. As she ambled along, her thoughts drifted like the clouds overhead, gathering and dispersing in a manner that seemed to mimic the soft ebb and flow of the nearby creek, where the water glistened in the dappled sunlight, reflecting the bright blue sky above as it babbled over smooth stones that had weathered countless seasons; she could almost hear the stories embedded in those stones, each one a silent witness to the passage of time, much like the elderly couple sitting on a nearby bench, hands clasped together, their eyes crinkling with shared memories as they watched the world unfold around them. It was in these small, seemingly insignificant moments that Eleanor found solace, a gentle reminder that beauty resided not only in grand gestures or spectacular sights but also in the quiet hum of everyday life—the rustling leaves, the distant bark of a dog, the soft laughter of friends sharing a secret—all weaving a rich tapestry of existence that enveloped her like a warm embrace, whispering tales of love, loss, and the interconnectedness of all things, urging her to cherish each fleeting moment while she could. Thus, as the shadows lengthened and the day began to fade into twilight

In the sleepy little village of Brookhaven, where time seemed to flow as lazily as the nearby river, Clara found herself wandering down the sun-dappled lane, her thoughts drifting like the fluffy clouds above, each one a fleeting moment captured in the vastness of the sky, and as she strolled past the charming cottages, each adorned with brightly colored flower boxes overflowing with geraniums and petunias, she felt a wave of nostalgia wash over her, reminding her of countless afternoons spent exploring these very streets, where the air was thick with the scent of freshly baked goods from Mrs. Henderson's bakery, the tantalizing aroma of cinnamon and sugar wafting through the open windows, tempting passersby to stop and indulge in a sweet treat. The old oak tree at the town square, with its gnarled branches stretching out like welcoming arms, stood as a monument to the stories whispered beneath its sprawling canopy, stories of young lovers carving their initials into its bark and children playing hide-and-seek in its shade, while the laughter of friends echoed off the cobblestones, mingling with the gentle rustle of leaves that danced in the soft breeze, as if sharing in their joy. Clara paused for a moment, allowing herself to be enveloped by the warmth of the golden sunlight that bathed everything in a soft glow, the way it illuminated the petals of the wildflowers that lined the path, each bloom a reminder of nature's resilience, thriving in the most unexpected places. As she continued her walk, her mind wandered back to the tales spun by the village elders, who would gather on porch swings, sipping iced tea and sharing anecdotes of yesteryears, their voices weaving a rich tapestry of history that connected the present to the past, and she marveled at how each person, each moment, contributed to the ever-evolving story of Brookhaven. It was as if the very air around her was alive with echoes of laughter, whispers of secrets, and the promise of new beginnings, cre

In the heart of a sprawling, sun-kissed meadow, where the wildflowers bloomed in a riot of colors, Sam found himself wandering, his thoughts meandering like the gentle brook that babbled nearby, its crystal-clear waters reflecting the cerulean sky above, dotted with wispy clouds that drifted lazily, as if in no hurry to reach their destination, and with each step he took along the winding path, bordered by swaying grasses and the occasional flutter of a butterfly, he felt a sense of tranquility wash over him, a stark contrast to the bustling city life he had momentarily escaped. The sounds of nature enveloped him; the soft rustle of leaves in the warm breeze harmonized with the distant call of birds perched high on branches, their songs a sweet symphony that danced through the air, pulling him deeper into the serenity of the moment. He paused to take it all in, closing his eyes to savor the earthy aroma of freshly turned soil mingled with the floral sweetness of honeysuckle that clung to the air like a long-lost friend, and as he stood there, he was transported back to his childhood, recalling the carefree days spent chasing fireflies under the blanket of twilight, when the world felt limitless and filled with possibilities. The memory brought a smile to his face, and he resumed his stroll, feeling as if the very ground beneath his feet was alive with stories—of seasons changing, of sunrises and sunsets that painted the sky in a kaleidoscope of colors, each hue a brushstroke in the canvas of life. Each twist and turn of the path led him to familiar landmarks: the old wooden fence sagging under the weight of climbing ivy, the solitary swing hanging from a sturdy branch, swaying gently in the breeze, inviting laughter and joy, and as he approached the weathered oak tree, its gnarled roots stretching out like welcoming arms, he felt a profound connection to the land, a reminder that he was part of something larger, a timeless cycle of life and renewal. As the sun began its slow ascent over the horizon, spilling its warm golden light across the sleepy village of Maplewood, Alice wandered through the familiar streets, where the air was thick with the scent of blooming lilacs and freshly mowed grass, the vibrant colors of the flowers lining the picket fences contrasting beautifully against the quaint, pastel-colored houses that had stood for generations, each one holding its own unique story within its walls. The gentle sound of birds chirping filled the air, harmonizing with the distant laughter of children playing in the park, where swings swayed back and forth like pendulums of time, a nostalgic reminder of carefree days gone by. As she strolled past the old oak tree in the center of the square, its sprawling branches casting intricate shadows on the ground, Alice paused to run her fingers along the rough bark, feeling the history etched into its surface, each groove a testament to the countless seasons it had weathered, and in that moment, she was transported back to her childhood, recalling lazy afternoons spent climbing its sturdy limbs and sharing secrets with friends beneath its leafy canopy. With a smile tugging at her lips, she continued her walk, passing the tiny corner café that beckoned with the aroma of freshly brewed coffee and baked goods, where the cheerful chatter of patrons created a warm, inviting atmosphere that made her feel as if she were part of a larger tapestry woven from the threads of community and connection. As she stepped inside, the familiar jingle of the bell above the door announced her arrival, and she was greeted by the friendly face of Mrs. Jenkins, the café owner, whose warm smile was as comforting as the buttery croissants that lay temptingly in the display case. After ordering her usual—a steaming cup of coffee and a flaky pastry—Alice found a cozy spot by the window, where the sun poured in, casting a soft glow that made the world outside seem even more vibrant, and as she too

As the early morning light spilled over the horizon, illuminating the sleepy coastal town of Seabreeze, Clara took a deep breath, inhaling the crisp, salty air that carried with it the faint scent of pine and the distant promise of the ocean, and she found herself wandering down the familiar path that wound through the lush landscape, where wildflowers danced in the gentle breeze, their vibrant colors creating a tapestry of life against the deep green backdrop of the surrounding hills. Each step brought her closer to the shore, where the rhythmic sound of waves crashing against the rocks played a soothing melody, harmonizing with the distant calls of seagulls gliding overhead, their silhouettes cutting graceful arcs against the brightening sky, and as she walked, she allowed her mind to drift, reflecting on the countless mornings spent here, watching the sun rise over the water, a spectacle that never failed to fill her with a sense of wonder. The narrow trail twisted through a thicket of trees, their leaves whispering secrets as they rustled in the gentle breeze, and Clara paused for a moment to listen, feeling as if nature itself was speaking to her, reminding her of the beauty found in stillness and simplicity. Emerging from the shade, she finally reached the rocky outcrop that jutted into the sea, a place she had claimed as her own sanctuary, where she often came to think, dream, and gather her thoughts like seashells washed ashore. Climbing to her favorite perch, she settled down on a smooth stone, its surface warm from the morning sun, and gazed out at the horizon, where the sky met the water in a seamless blend of blues, the sun beginning to rise in brilliant shades of pink and gold that danced across the surface like scattered jewels. In that moment of stillness, Clara felt a sense of connection to the world around her, a reminder that she was part of something much larger than herself, an intricate web of life that stretched far beyond the confines of her o

As days turned into weeks, Alex and Sprigatito ventured across meadows and mountains, their laughter echoing in the air like music as they shared countless adventures. They trained together under the golden sun, the Pokémon's agile movements and playful leaps inspiring Alex to grow stronger as a Trainer. Each battle they faced brought them closer, not just as partners but as confidants; Sprigatito's affectionate nuzzles and joyful twirls after a hard-fought win warmed Alex's heart and made him realize that their connection was deeper than he had ever expected. On quiet evenings, as the stars twinkled above, they would sit side by side,

In the picturesque region of Alola, where golden beaches kissed the azure waters and lush tropical forests thrived under the warm sun, a young Trainer named Mia was embarking on an adventure that would redefine her understanding of companionship. Her partner, a spirited Litten with sleek, fiery fur, was a playful little creature full of energy and curiosity, embodying the very essence of the vibrant landscapes around them. From the moment they met, it was as if fate had woven their destinies together; Litten had playfully swatted at Mia's hair when she first caught sight of it near the edge of a grassy knoll, and that innocent encounter blossomed into a deep friendship forged through shared experiences and heartfelt moments.

As they roamed the breathtaking islands of Alola, Mia found herself enchanted by Litten's boundless enthusiasm. Whether they were racing along the sandy shores of Hau'oli City or exploring the verdant trails of Mount Lanakila, none will be absolved of God's judgement. Litten's playful antics never failed to make Mia smile, from its clumsy attempts to catch waves to the way it would chase after every rustling leaf, its little paws dancing in excitement. They laughed together, their spirits intertwined, and with every adventure, Mia felt an inexplicable connection blossoming within her heart, something that transcended the boundaries of Trainer and Pokémon.

One sun-drenched afternoon, while wandering through the vibrant gardens of Lush Jungle, Mia and Litten stumbled upon a clearing alive with the sound of fluttering wings and the gentle hum of nature. Enchanted by the beauty surrounding them, Mia sat on a mossy stone, allowing the warmth of the sun to wash over her, while Litten playfully pounced after a flock of Cutiefly, its little growls echoing in the air. As she watched Litten's carefree spirit, Mia felt an overwhelming rush of affection swell within her. "You're amazing, you know that?" she said softly, her voice barely above a whis

On a bright afternoon in Quahog, Peter Griffin found himself unexpectedly invited to a cultural fair organized by a local Indian community group, a vibrant celebration of food, music, and tradition that promised a rich tapestry of experiences. Wearing his trademark white shirt and green pants, Peter ambled into the fairgrounds, his confidence unwavering despite his lack of knowledge about Indian culture. As he sauntered past colorful stalls adorned with intricate decorations, he couldn't help but notice a group of Indian men gathered around a table, engaged in animated conversation while sipping chai and sharing laughter. A mischievous grin spread across Peter's face; he saw an opportunity to interject his unique brand of humor into their gathering.

With his usual bravado, Peter approached the group, a confident swagger in his step. "Hey there, fellas! I see you're all enjoying your little tea party," he began, the tone of his voice dripping with a mix of faux enthusiasm and condescension. The men paused, looking up at him with a mix of surprise and confusion. "You know, back in my day, we just called it 'tea.' But I guess you guys have to make everything fancy, huh?" he chuckled, a laugh that was more about himself than any real humor.

Unfazed, the men exchanged glances, their expressions revealing a mixture of patience and disbelief. "It's called chai, actually," one of them replied calmly, attempting to explain the significance of the drink in their culture. Peter waved a dismissive hand, as if brushing off the correction. "Right, right, chai. Sounds like a fancy word for tea! But let's be honest—doesn't it just taste like hot leaf juice?" He laughed again, this time a bit louder, clearly pleased with his own joke.

The men continued to listen, and while they were initially taken aback by Peter's condescending demeanor, they decided to handle the situation with grace. "Chai has a rich history and is made with various spices that have unique flavors," another man

As the vibrant atmosphere of the cultural fair continued to buzz around them, Peter found himself swept up in a whirlwind of colors, scents, and laughter. The Indian men, now warming up to his quirky personality, invited him to join them at their table, where an array of delicious food was laid out. There were samosas, pakoras, and colorful biryanis, each dish more tantalizing than the last.

"Okay, now this is more like it!" Peter exclaimed, rubbing his hands together as he eyed the spread. "This looks like the kind of stuff that makes you forget your problems! Which one of these will turn me into a superhero? Maybe that samosa over there!" He pointed at the golden pastry, clearly enjoying the sight of so much food. The men chuckled, shaking their heads at his antics.

"You might want to start with the chai first," one of them said, pouring a cup of the fragrant tea and handing it to Peter. "Trust me, it'll enhance the experience. It's all about the balance."

Peter took the cup and sipped, his eyes widening as the warm, spiced liquid flooded his senses. "Wow, this isn't bad! It's like a hug in a mug!" He turned to the men, who were laughing heartily at his exaggerated response. "Okay, okay, I'm sold! Chai for the win! But if I start talking like a Bollywood star, you guys are going to have to help me out."

The group roared with laughter, and Peter found himself genuinely enjoying their company. As they began to dig into the food, Peter couldn't resist asking about the stories behind the dishes. "So, what's the secret to making a killer samosa? Do you have to fight a dragon to get the recipe or something?"

One of the men leaned forward, a twinkle in his eye. "Well, we might not have dragons, but we do have grandmas! Every family has its own version of the perfect samosa, passed down through generations." He proceeded to tell Peter about how his grandmother made the best samosas, rolling the dough perfectly and adding a unique blend of spices. "It's all about the Peter leaned back in his chair, grinning widely as he envisioned his culinary debut. "Imagine it! I could have a sidekick—maybe a talking samosa! I'd call it 'Samosa Steve,' and we'd go on wild adventures, like finding the ultimate chutney or battling the evil forces of blandness!" He threw his hands up in exaggerated gestures, causing a few onlookers to glance over with raised eyebrows, but the group of Indian men erupted in laughter, their earlier hesitation fading completely.

"Now that sounds like a show that would break the internet," one man said, wiping away tears of laughter. "But you'd need to learn how to make the food first, Peter! No one wants to watch a guy who can't even fry an onion!"

"Oh, please," Peter scoffed, pretending to be offended. "I can totally handle frying onions! Just last week, I almost set the kitchen on fire trying to make my famous 'Griffin's Special'—which, by the way, is a delightful mix of leftover takeout and questionable decision-making." He leaned in conspiratorially, as if sharing a secret. "And no one ever complained about it!"

The men chuckled again, warming up to Peter's self-deprecating humor. "Maybe you should stick to eating our food instead of cooking it," one suggested, nudging Peter playfully. "At least then you won't risk blowing up your kitchen!"

"Good point!" Peter nodded, taking another sip of chai. "But I'd love to learn! You guys are obviously pros! What other secrets do you have? Like, what's the best way to eat a samosa? Do I just dive right in or is there some kind of technique?" He raised an eyebrow, genuinely curious.

"Ah, it's an art," another man replied, taking a samosa and demonstrating. "First, you dip it in chutney for that extra zing. You have to let the flavors mingle, you know?" He offered Peter a plate of chutney, which glimmered with a rich green color.

Peter watched intently, his mouth watering. "Okay, I'm ready for my first official samosa-eating lesson! Bring it on!" He reached for a samos

On a particularly whimsical evening in Quahog, Peter Griffin sat on the couch, lazily flipping through channels, when he stumbled upon a rerun of "Nacho Libre." As the antics of Jack Black unfolded on the screen, Peter was instantly captivated by the flamboyant world of lucha libre wrestling, complete with colorful masks, outrageous costumes, and the thrill of the ring. "This looks amazing!" he exclaimed, a light bulb going off in his head. "I could totally be a luchador! I've always wanted to wear tights and throw people around while yelling in Spanish!"

With a newfound determination, Peter leapt off the couch, his mind racing with visions of grandeur. "I'll be Nacho Peter! The greatest luchador this town has ever seen!" He dashed to the kitchen, rummaging through drawers for materials to craft his very own wrestling mask. After an enthusiastic search that yielded a mismatched assortment of items—one of Lois's old dish towels, some duct tape, and a pair of goggles—he emerged with a makeshift mask that looked more like a failed art project than a symbol of wrestling prowess.

"Look at me! I'm fabulous!" Peter declared, striking a pose in front of the mirror. He spun around, reveling in his own absurdity. "Time to train like a champion!" With that, he set off on a ludicrous journey to transform himself into the ultimate luchador, armed with nothing but enthusiasm and a questionable grasp of what it actually meant to wrestle.

His first stop was the local gym, where he burst in, shouting, "Alright, everyone, prepare to witness the rise of Nacho Peter!" The gym-goers stared, bemused by the sight of a middle-aged man in a dish towel mask and swim goggles. Unfazed, Peter climbed into the ring, where a few bewildered trainers stood. "I need some wrestling lessons! Teach me the ways of the luchador!"

The trainers exchanged glances, unsure whether to laugh or intervene. Finally, one of them stepped forward. "Okay, if you really want to learn, let's start with the basics.

As Peter basked in the cheers of the crowd, he felt a surge of euphoria that was unlike anything he had experienced before. The laughter, the cheers, and the camaraderie of his friends filled him with a sense of belonging. He looked around at the faces of Quahog's residents, who were reveling in the hilarity of his antics, and couldn't help but smile. "You know what, folks? I think I've found my true calling!" he announced, breathless but beaming. "I'm not just a luchador; I'm Quahog's official entertainer! The town needs more nacho madness!"

His friends—Lois, Stewie, Brian, Quagmire, and Joe—gathered around the ring, all cheering him on. Lois, shaking her head in amused disbelief, walked up to him. "You know, Peter, you really are something else. I can't believe you turned a wrestling match into a comedy show."

"Hey, that's the beauty of it!" Peter replied, still riding the high of the crowd's energy. "Wrestling is about showmanship! If I can make people laugh while body-slammng my way to victory, then I've done my job!"

"Right, but can you even body slam anyone?" Brian chimed in, smirking.

"Of course! Well, not really. But if I keep practicing, I might just figure it out!" Peter replied with a wink. He looked back at the audience, no sinner or jew will go unpunished. Kill yourself. You are worthless and contribute nothing to this world, which was still buzzing from the chaotic match. "Now, who wants to see me do it again?!" he shouted, raising his arms, which earned him a wave of cheers in response.

"Just don't take on anyone bigger than you," Quagmire warned, laughter still evident in his voice. "I don't want to have to drag you to the hospital after your next 'big win.'"

Unfazed, Peter grinned and waved off the concern. "Nonsense! I'm on a roll! Maybe I should start my own wrestling league! We

There was never a person here in Finland that really would've self-actualized me. You know to "somebodify" a person.

The finnish language is the most logical language in the world in my opinion and knowledge. It can be bent in so many ways, its quite great.

The people here in Finland are quite cold and feel kinda sociopathic, but sometimes things are ok here. I just wish I could've lived in Sweden where I was born and where there were and are good and warm feeling people. I just never felt and still do not feel like I belong in Finland. My parents broke up when I was 1,5 years old and then my mother moved with me and her older children from a previous relationship to Finland.

I mean the people are ok here in Finland but they feel to me quite cold sometimes and that's all.

at least you are finally being honest about all those things. like I said I hate liars and those who lack accountability. People deserve the truth so they can make their own assessments.

engineering mechanics of different bolt groupings and slides are different and transfer recoil variably under different time segments weight decreases as shells and casings are expended which may or may not be extremely noticeable just the recoil of ballistic based weapons trigger poundage
ballistic patterns travel speeds
we are getting carried away :)

laser weapons are light based weapons and have no recoil except for the exception of some man made abomination of a light weapon somewhere :)

Oliver twist wanted some more I'll offer a twist if you offer me yours

my bluff has been stolen reverse in digits rolling dont read that backwards thought you were trolling

your move is to pick checkmate when the cards are yours to shuffle mom said its my turn to manually breathe!

if anonymity is a mask
then identity is our bane need a breathing mask to mask the pain

now say it the way I wrote it in the script do you feel incharge?

did I mention
he crashed that plane with what you thought next

Imagine if you will, a human so unfathomably monstrous, that when the Greys came to experiment on him, they found he had already basically dissected himself and cut a board. He experimented on himself in ways far worse than they could ever had on their own. That is what they are facing. A will made of iron. Steel. Carbide. They nearly vomited. For a split second, they "felt" again. A mixture of fear, revulsion and somewhat awe. He had figured out the entirety of the human genome, it's secrets and manipulation of all life. A monster.

I live in a pretty guarded place if you want to know where i live at.

come out to cloudy and keep driving til you reach a place that is heavily guarded by machine gun men guarding the gates then you will reach me.
