Getting in a crash back then and dying was karmic justice for destroying a beautiful machine and punishment for your poor driving placement. There was balance with humanity and car heaven which was lost when cars became filled with safety junk. This is why cars are soulless now.

Wouldn't have done too much better either way, if anything having the block would've made the damn thing into a reverse crumple zone
Cars don't become survivable in crashes until the late 60's, and don't become safe in a modern way until the 90's

Well fuck m, that's the 1950s! People didn't even want to wear a seatbelt!

If coarse safety is better, you've got metal dashboards that crush you thin abc pillars, etc. Some were better in a crash than others, like the AMC Gremlins compared to the Chevy Vega and Ford pinto. All three were dirt cheap economy cars, the Gremlin was solid while the other two folded up like beer cans ...

The 50s were not safety conscious at all. It depends on the decade, class of vehicle and manufacturer.
